Abstract:

The dynamic strains on an electronic pod were monitored during the environmental tests, consisting of sine, random vibrations, shock and constant acceleration tests. Over the range of specifications for dynamic tests the measured strain levels were observed to be low. However from the qualification point of view they can not be neglected as they have to be superposed over their static component of the strains.